Children who are global learners are big picture thinkers. They do better with ideas than details. Learning may not follow a linear path. Some "easier" things may be harder to grasp than a difficult concept. This child typically understands the details after the big picture is understood

Children who are sequential learners learn concepts in a logical order. New concepts build upon former concepts. This child typically understands the whole picture after the steps are mastered. Most classrooms and curriculum cater to this learning style.
